Editor's Rant

Finally winter and the rains are here, I for one enjoy this time of year. I can grow lots of vegetables for my cavies!

I have to give Liz Hart a round of applause for the wonderful effort she does in the kitchen. All this and two young children to look after too! She does such a great job that I think, and I include myself in this, that we forget that we are suppose to be helping provide some of the food, like cakes and biscuits and things. We all need to pull up our socks and help out a bit and not just rely on Liz to do all the hard work. Where would we be without her! Hungry for one! Also a big thank you to Glenys, who also gives a hand in the kitchen and cooking of the goodies we all love to eat.

Due to the difficulties of copyright, it is hard to get articles for the newsletter. It is so much easier to get original material from our own club member, that means YOU! Many thanks to Dr Odette Williams for her articles she has sent in recently. Please people, send me anything that can be used. We need more than just show results.

If you have just realised that your stud ad is missing, that is because you have not paid for it this year!

I really must get up, but I just can't seem to get motivated!

I am so cute, they will not mind if I shred this.

CASE STUDY -

By Dr Odette Williams

DAWN GLOW, a torty & white sow born November 2008, was an interesting veterinary case that may help some members recognise a similar scenario. Nothing too unusual about her growing up period, except perhaps she did seem always rather a small guinea in size, particularly as her mother was a large, very fat handsome thing. She had a litter of three babies in late May aged 6 months, and another with only one baby at the end of August. She still seemed a smaller animal, but gave birth to one baby again in mid November. As there is up to 60-70 GP's in the cages at that time of the year, a quick glance around to make sure they're all eating and moving briskly is my daily routine. The mothers with babies get preferential caging and more ad lib feeding, more fruit and vegetables as well. The cages are cleaned out weekly, and they are bedded on newspaper and plenty of oaten hay. I was taken aback to feel how terribly thin Dawn Glow had become, on handling her to clean the cages a fortnight after she had the final baby. She was really quite emaciated, and more intense observation began. She was rushing hungrily for food, and fussing about with it, bustling about, looking interested, but when you really watched, she wasn't getting hardly anything really down and swallowed. She didn't have a wet mouth or chin, or any saliva staining, and looked just a little uncomfortable actually trying to eat (but I had seen worse in my career). She had a little hair loss, likely to be the nutritional alopecia that can accompany lactation in some sows. (It is differentiated from other skin conditions by being a diffuse all over hair loss and baldness, with no itching or scratching, in a heavily milking sow feeding a litter) Anyway, I knew from long experience with covies and their conditions what I suspected was her problem, and on that basis euthanised her, preparatory to a Post Mortem examination to confirm the diagnosis.

The diagnosis was severe malocclusion of the molar teeth. If you can bear to look at the photos, where her cheeks have been opened up to give proper access to the back of the mouth cavity, you will see malalignment - the molar teeth have overgrown and begun to curve inwards over the tongue, partially occluding and abrading it in the middle. Therefore they don't align for the grinding action of chewing, and as you know with continuously growing teeth, then they grow unchecked. She had one molar that had penetrated the cheek mucosa and was digging in. The overgrown molars made the biting action of the incisor teeth ineffective, and her chewing was hugely impaired. Her gut contents were very empty, there was very little fat anywhere left on her, and she was starving to death - the common result of this condition. You will hear it called SLOBBERS, as some animals exhibit salivation and salivary staining of their chin fur, but she didn't show this. I hadn't let her get to the absolute end stage of starvation, choosing the humane option of euthanasia. The process of the teeth malocclusion would have been developing over several months at least, probably explaining why she'd not grown to full size.

In discussion: I get one of these cases every year or two (in a colony of around 40). Usually they present just the same - very thin and difficulty chewing/biting food, but appear bright, active and hungry. Over the years (I am a vet having kept GP's for 38 years) we have tried sometimes to anaesthetise these GP's, and made valiant attempts to rasp the overgrowth down, much as with equine dentistry, and little rodent mouth gags and tools exist for the purpose. Soft foods are given after the surgery. Access and visualisation of the rear of the mouth is difficult, because it is a small, dark, far back cavity, with limited ability to open wider. Some treated guinea pigs have survived for a few weeks, but in my experience have never made a normal recovery and gone on to survive. Part of the problem is that by the time symptoms are recognised, the pathological changes are quite marked. It is not uncommon in 1-2yo sows, I find, and as in this case, may come to notice when she loses condition markedly after feeding a litter. The calcium drain on the sow's body during lactation, or repeated lactation's, may possibly have something to do with it, but I rather feel there is an individual predisposition to malocclusion.

I did not include the photos of the post mortem results of covies teeth. I felt that they would be too graphic for general viewing. If you wish to see the photos, feel free to e-mail me. - Editor.
