Please note that no cavy is to be sold for less than $35. Please bring boxes for your cavies to go to their new home in.

All cavies must be in good health and over 200 gms in weight. Free from any break in the skin or hair loss.

A card will be given to each purchaser, with Cavy West contacts and the breeders name. This is to guarantee the health of the sold cavy and for further information.

Benching fee of $5 for every cavy sold, there will be no fee for unsold cavies.

Please attach detail tags to your cages BEFORE placing cages on the For Sale table. This will help prevent so much congestion at the table.

Only the person in charge of the For Sale section, or their authorised assistant, can sell cavies. Your money will be available from 3:45 onwards.

No straw, hay, sawdust or shavings or other loose bedding, are allowed at shows and this includes the For Sale section.

Apart from a quick last minute 'brush up' and Longhairs, NO GROOMING allowed at shows. If it is not groomed before the show you will have to put it on the table ungroomed!

Bulking up – what does it mean

By Ken Hart

I first came across the term bulking up several years ago. The proposed method to bulk up intrigued me. I have been coming across the term more frequently and the proposed ways to bulk up continue to intrigue. The first question I ask myself is what they mean by bulk up. Intuitively I answer myself that it is to add body mass or as a cavy exhibitor would more correctly say improve condition. But my training as an animal scientist tells me this would require increasing the amount of protein in the diet. All of the proposed ways to bulk up actually reduce the concentration of protein in the diet. They do this by increasing the proportion of energy. What this strategy does not consider is that the proportion of protein, which needs to be about 18% for a cavy, is important to maintain.

The time that most people choose they need to bulk up is in winter. So my next question to myself is why is the time of year apparently important. At this point I have made some assumptions, which can be fraught with danger, but lets be brave. The first is that the first cavy fancier to use the term did not coin the term. They heard it from someone else. My next assumption is that it was probably from a feed supplier, whose main customers were horse owners. This assumption is supported at least in that most of the bulking agents that are proposed seem to be good sources of energy for horses, which are supplied in winter.

This assumption also fits with the requirement for extra energy needed for livestock in winter. To understand why livestock have this need for extra energy you need to understand the purpose of energy in an animals diet. The answer is many things. The most important function is to maintain basal metabolism.

This simply means the energy required to stay alive. While this doesn't sound like much energy would be needed it is surprisingly high. When this base level is not met the animal loses weight, even when it does nothing. The next need is for work. The amount needed for this varies a great deal and is based on the level of activity that is undertaken. For example a working sheep dog needs a lot more energy than a pet kelpie that is only taken for a walk once per day. So that we are clear on the point of work. Please understand that late pregnancy is hard work and lactating is even harder. Just ask your mum.

This does not explain bulking up however. Given that it is not due to protein as there is actually less in the diet, how does energy bulk up. The answer is that when energy is in surplus it is stored as fat. So is bulking up just a process of adding fat to the body to make the animal bigger. At least in an unchanged environment that is what would happen. But remember this is done in winter so the environment has changed or at least it has for livestock. So is it really meant to just add fat?

The other really important function energy has for animals is maintaining body temperature. This is an incredibly important function because if it goes wrong it can quickly become life threatening. This is because failure to maintain body temperature means that the animal draws on body reserves to provide energy if it is not provided in its diet. What does this mean. Firstly it will draw on fat reserves. Some may say this is not a bad thing. But it is a very bad thing when there are no fat reserves left to draw on. It then starts to draw on muscle reserves. This is what happens when humans get anorexia nervosa. That is when it becomes life threatening.

So adding energy to the diet in winter could be a good thing as it will help your covies maintain body temperature, so they do not have to use their body tissues to do this. But is that a good way to manage your covies. There are two answers here. Yes it is if your covies live outside in winter or you have a cold shed and draughty conditions. But I don't see many of you saying yes that is a good system and that is how I manage my stud.

The other answer is of course no it is not a good way, it is better to keep your covies warm in winter. Keeping them in warm conditions means they do not need extra energy to keep warm. By the way, warm does not mean hot. Sixteen degrees is supposed to be the ideal temperature for a cavy. Most humans find that a bit chilly.

But I am a realist. Most of us do not have such conditions for our covies. If you do need to bulk up the best way for covies is to offer more of the same food they already get. This should have the correct balance of protein and energy. Protein will add muscle rather than fat. Energy is rarely a limiting factor in cavy nutrition, particularly if they have a good supply of good quality hay and fresh greens. Like many grazing animals covies have gut bugs that can digest hay and other plant material into energy more efficiently than humans and other meat eating animals. So if there is any surplus energy it will be stored as fat anyway, but with the important bonus of more muscle.

In summary I think bulking up is a term that cavy fanciers have, unnecessarily, borrowed from horse owners. It appears to be a term that in realty means adding more energy to the diet. For covies this means the proportion of protein in the diet will be reduced. That is not a good thing and can have adverse outcomes for breeding sows and young growing animals. The best strategies for maintaining body temperature in winter is through housing and or simply offering more of the food they already get, particularly concentrates such as pellets or dry mixes that have at least 18% protein.

Your Cavy is a Rodent
.....or is it?

(This article is a gathering of many articles that size and copyright prevents me from printing here. Also many of them are full of those difficult technical terms that result in you spending as much time in the dictionary as you do reading the article! This is simply what I have gleaned from my, and Barbara Grieve, wanderings on the internet on this subject. - Ed)

Taxonomists (these are the people who's job it is to name and classify animals into their various family trees) looked at the Guinea Pig and based mostly on the structure and shape of the its head and teeth, declared it to be a rodent, the same family tree as rats and mice. The main trait of rodents are the incisors, which only have enamel on the front of the teeth, and these teeth are ever growing and self sharpening. Indeed the cavy does have these sort of incisors, but unlike a rodent, the cavy also has premolars and not just molars as rodents do. Rodent enamel is yellow, but the Cavies enamel is white.

This is not the only difference between cavies and rodents, so over the years there have been grumbles about whether a cavy is really a rodent or not.

However in this day and age of gene sequencing, it was found that the cavy was not only not a rodent, it is not even close on the family tree! You would think this would settle the matter, but no, there are still long and seemingly bitter arguments between the taxonomists and geneticists about where on the family tree a cavy should sit.

There are many other differences between cavies and rodents.

The protein the blood of a cavy is different from any other rodent

All rodents can synthesise Vit C, but the Cavy can not.

Cavies have a longer gestation period, 68-72 days compared to 18-21 days in most rodents and cavies give birth to fewer babies that have hair, teeth, and are capable of running around and even eating solid food from day one. Rodents usually have large litters of naked, helpless babies, that are “blind” and “deaf” at birth.

The Oestrus cycle of a Cavy is 15-17 days, rodents 3-5 days.

Rodents have tails, even an hamster has a tiny tail, mostly internal, while a cavy has no tail at all.

Cavies have four toes on the front and three on the back feet, rodents have four toes on all their feet.

The argument goes on, some saying that the rodent family is so large, that the cavy is just on a different part of it. Others saying that the cavy is so different, that it is on a whole different tree. So the arguments go on.

Interesting Info

It was while researching the above article that I found that a Vet who specialised in teeth, stated that it was very important for both Rabbits and Cavies to have a diet based on grass. There was a very noticeable difference between those people who fed their rabbits and/or cavies mostly fruit and vegetables and those who fed mostly grass. The grass feeders had a much less problems with the teeth of their pets than the fruit and vegetables feeders. “Food” for thought! I have to say that I have found this to be true of my stud. I have very few cavies with teeth troubles, even though I have about 200 cavies. The bulk of my cavies entire diet is their daily feed of grass.

Trophy table at the Anniversary Show

Male or Female?

You might not know this...but a lot of non-living objects are actually either male or female. Here are some examples:

FREEZER BAGS: They are male, because they hold everything in...but you can see right through them.

PHOTOCOPIERS: These are female, because once turned off..it takes a while to warm them up again. They are an effective reproductive device if the right buttons are pushed...but can also wreak havoc if you push the wrong buttons.

TYRES: Tyres are male, because they go bald easily and are often over inflated

HOT AIR BALLOONS: Also a male object... because to get them to go anywhere.....you have to light a fire under them.

SPONGES: These are female...because they are soft.....squeezable and retain water.

WEB PAGES: Female...because they're constantly being looked at and frequently getting hit on.

TRAINS: Definitely male... because they always use the same old lines for picking up people.

EGG TIMERS: Egg timers are female because....over time....all the weight shifts to the bottom.

HAMMERS: Male.... because in the last 500 years.....they've hardly changed at all...and are occasionally handy to have around.

THE REMOTE CONTROL: Female. Ha! You probably thought it would be male...but consider this: It easily gives a man pleasure, he'd be lost without it...and while he doesn't always know which buttons to push.....he just keeps trying
